Our programme equipped Trainees with the skills, confidence and network to gain secure long-term employment, taking them out of unemployment and into financial stability. Over the six-month pilot, we worked with six young adult offenders. Of the six, four completed a 12-week work experience programme and the other two received culinary and customer service training before moving onto further training with another organisation. Since presenting at TFN, has your organisation undergone any other significant changes?	I'm sad to write that it is time for me to move on from Kitchenette Karts after difficult circumstances outside of work. In many ways this project has been a huge success - and I'm glad that I got to see it through to its end. We delivered significant real impact to our trainees, sold lots of exceptional street food, and developed a social enterprise model that could work and scale. Unfortunately I am not in a position to carry on that mission. I'm currently working with our board to explore opportunities for one or more of our charity partners to receive our remaining assets and use them to carry on the legacy of the project. Though we know that this is the end of the journey for Kitchenette Karts, we're hopeful that it's the beginning of a new journey for another social enterprise or charity that wants to take on our mission.
Do you have any other comments or feedback on the experience of the TFN process?	It was great, thank you.
Can you tell us any personal stories to highlight the value of the project?	Testimonial from our charity partner Switchback, who refer young adult prison leavers to our training programme and deliver wraparound support and mentorship: "We are so pleased by how the partnership has developed. The KK team have done fantastic work with our Trainees and the biggest testament of this is the Trainees's engagement and feedback. The
